From the New York Mirror. FIRST IMPRESSIONS, OR NOTES BY THE WAY.

BY NATHANIEL P. WILLIS. (Concluded.)

Went to the chapel of the dancing dervishes. It is left them on board. were as true here as it it is said to be in some more civ- education will refine them to their disadvantage.

It was a pretty, octagonal interior, with a gallery the mihrab or niche indicating the direction of the prophet's tomb, standing obliquely from the front of the building. Hundreds of small lamps hung in the area, just out of the reach of the dervishes' tall caps, and all around between the gallery; a part of the floor was raised, matted, and divided from the body of the church by a ballustrade. It would have made an exceedingly pret-

None but the dervishes entered within the paling, and they soon began to enter, each advancing, first towards the mihrab, and going through fifteen or twenty minutes' prostrations and prayers. Their dress is very humble. A high, white felt-cap, without a rim, like a sugar-loaf enlarged a little at the smaller end, protects the head, and a long dress of dirt-colored cloth, reaching quite to the heels and bound at the waist with a girdle, com pletes the costume. They look like men who have made up their minds to seem religious, and though said to be a set of very good fellows, they have a Mawworm expression of face generally, which was very repulsive. I must except the chief of the sect, however, who entered when all the rest had seated themselves on the floor, and after a brief genuflection or two, took possession of a rich Angora carpet placed for him near the mihrab. He was a small old man, distinguished in his dress only by the addition of a green band to his cap, (the sign of his pilgrimage to Mecca) and the entire absence of the sanctimonious look. Still he was serious, and there was no mark in his clear, intelligent eye and amiable features, of any hesitancy or want of sincerity in his devotion. He is said to be a learned man, and he is certainly a very prepossessing one, though he would be taken up as a beggar in any city in the United States. It is a thing one learns in "dangling about the world," by the way, to form opinions of men quite independently of their dress.

After sitting a while in quaker meditation, the brotherhood rose one by one, (there were ten of them I think,) and marched round the room with their toes the music of a drum and a Persian flute, the music of a drum and a Persian flute, the music of a drum and a Persian flute, the music of a drum and a Persian flute, as they are the world in the school will be continued open during soon after sunset, and the school will be continued open during soon after sunset, and the school will be continued open during the whole evening.

Every facility will be given for obtaining a thorough practical knowledge of these languages.

Gertlemen will be attended for private lessons at all hours during the day, not devoted to the classes of Ladies, or on any evenings not occupied by the regular classes.

Those gentlemen who propose Joining the classes, are requested to make as early application as convenient.

No 210 Washington street, next door to Pendleton's. passed the carpet of the crossed-leg chief, they twisted dexterously and made three salaams, and then raising their arms, which they held out straight during the whole dance, they commenced twirling on one foot, using the other after the manner of a paddle to keep up the motion. I forgot to mention that they laid aside their outer dresses before commencing the dance. They remained in dirty white tunics reaching to the floor, and very full at the bottom, so that with the regular motion of their whir!, the wind blew them out into a circle, like what the girls in our country call "making cheeses." They twisted with surprising exactness and Panorama. rapidity, keeping clear of each other, and maintaining their places with the regularity of machines. I have seen a great deal of waltzing, but I think the dancing dervishes for precision and spirit, might give a lesson

We left them twisting. They had been going for half an hour and it began to look very like per-petual motion. Unless their brains are addled, their devotion, during this dizzy performance at least, must be quite suspended. A man who could think of his maker, while revolving so fast that his nose is indistinct, must have some power of abstraction.

The seraskier pasha came alongside first in his state caique, and embraced the commodore, as he stepped upon the deck, with great cordiality. He is a short, fat old man, with a snow-white beard, and so bow-septi Mw&Fi2wi cap of the army, with a long blue frock-coat, the collar so tight as nearly to choke him and the body not shaped to the figure, but made to fall round him like a sack. The red bloated skin of his neck fell over, so as almost to cover the gold with which the collar was

The capitan pasha is a tall, slender man, of precisely that look and manner which we call gentlemanly. His beard grows untrimmed in the Turkish fashion and is slightly touched with gray. His eye is anxious, but resolute, and he looks like a man of resource and ability. His history is as singular as that of most other great man in Turkish fashion and is resource and ability. He was a slave of Mohammed Ali, the rebellious pasha of Egypt. Being entrusted by his master with a brig and cargo for Leghorn, he sold vessel and lading, lived like a gentleman in Italy for some years with the proceeds, and as the best security against the retribution of his old master, offered his services to the sultan, with whom Ali was just commencing hostilities. Navaltalent was in request, and he soon arrived at his present dignity. He is to be the only officer in the fleet who knows any thing of his profession.

Haleil Pasha arrived last. The sultan's future sonin-law is a man of perhaps thirty-five. He is lightcomplexioned, stout, round-faced, and looks, like a respectable grocer, "well to do in the world." He has a certain air of ease and command, and carries the promise of good fortune in his confident features. He is to be married almost immediately. He, too, was a

The three dignitaries made the rounds of the ship and then entered the cabin, where the pianoforte, (a novelty to the seraskier and Haleil Pasha, and to most of the attendant officers,) and the commodore's agreea-The dancing dervishes—visit from the sultan's cabinet—the Seraskier and the capitan pasha—humble origin of Turkish dignitaries.

This is the season for advertising, and in no paper, we can assure the business portion of the public, will their advertisements receive a more extended circulation than in the Post, should they think proper to use its columns for that purpose. Two thousand copies is the number of our Daily publication-not a morning paper in the city equals it.

Daniel Webster's principles .- It is well known to the public that Samuel Bell of New Hampshire, has grossly opposed the will and wishes of his constituents in his votes and official acts in the Senate of the United States. That he has derided and disregarded the repeated instructions of the legislature of his state-that some years ago he promised to resign if ever he should fail to represent the will of his constituents, and called Heaven to witness the sincerity of his declaration-that the lust for money and power has proved paramount to the obligations of this oath-to the instructions of his constituents and to his own self respect, if he ever had any, and he stands in the Senate a disobedient servant. the scorn of every true republican. A dinner was recently given, strange as it may seem, in honor of this man and his principles-if principles they can be called -Daniel Webster received an invitation to this feast, and wrote the following answer accepting the honor.

"Boston, Sept. 20, 1834. "Gentlemen,-I accept with great pleasure the invitation, communicated by you, to the dinner which is proposed to be given to Mr Bell on the 30th inst. In my judgment, no gentleman is better entitled to such a manifestation of regard and confidence, from those whose interests have been confided to his hands .--His ability, disinterestedness and firmness, have obtained for him a high degree of regard from his political friends, while his manly deportment and independence have secured the personal respect and esteem of the body of which he has been so long a

Another opportunity will be afforded to me of expressing my cordial thanks for the resolution under which you have acted in transmitting me this invitation. In the mean time, I pray you, gentlemen, to accept for yourselves my friendly regards and sincere fond wishes. I am, gentlemen, your obliged friend, DANIEL WEBSTER."

In this answer Daniel Webster tacitly, nay expressly approves of all the odious conduct of Samuel Bell-no gentleman he says is better entitled to such a manifestation of regard. Mr Bell has disobeyed the instructions of his legislature and gone counter to the known will of his constituents. The servant has set himself above his her one question farther, which he did as follows :master, the people, and for that disobedience Mr Webster thinks him entitled to the honor of a public dinner from the federal party. He comes forward to sanction the doctrine of John Q. Adams, that the representative ought not to be palsied by the will of his constituents .-The Democracy of this nation, we are sure, will not agree with Daniel Webster, but they will remember this exposition of his principles.

For the Morning Post. The Whig Candidate .- By a communication in the Post of the 23d, signed Junius, I am led to believe, that a portion of the public are mistaken with regard to the precise individual, who has been nominated as the Federal candidate for member of Congress from this district. It is ABBOT Lawrence, not Amos Lawrence. Speaking of Abbot Lawrence as a "working man," possessing "industry and frugality combined," as "early determined to build up for himself and his family, at the expense of the people, a princely fortune," as "at the head of the most powerful aristocracy in the United States," as a "second Biddle, a manufacturing Biddle," &c. &c., it is evident that Junius means Mr Amos Lawrence, the elder brother, the senior partner, the head of his family, and the foundation of its fortunes. He is, unquestionably, a shrewd man, a real Yankee, always awake to the "main chance," able and willing to "take care of number one," on a large and liberal scale. His calculations and foresight are sure and successful, and his head-work has undoubtedly had great influence, not only with regard to his own accumulations of wealth and those of his family, but also in connexion with the measures, good or bad, which have been pursued with regard to the ultra protective system, and the unjust and disorganizing policy adopted by New Abbot Lawrence, the candidate, is a younger brother, brought up as an apprentice in the store of Amos Lawrence, and, since his manhood, a partner in the concern. He is a mere boy, compared with his brother. He is said to be an active man, a good salesman, and well calculated to carry into execution the deep plans of his wiser brother. Though "industrious," he has never been under the necessity of practising any extraordinary "frugality;"-it was not he who "built up the Lawrence family ;" nor have I ever heard him spoken of as a "second Biddle," or as being "at the head of the aristocracy," or of any other powerful class or combination. He owes his present advancement to the talents and influence of his brother, rather than to his own merits or talents; and this, by the way, has not been attained with perfect unanimity or harmony in the Federal party. I am told, that many prominent members were and are opposed to his nomination, and that there is still a probability that another candidate will be named and supported by a minority of the party. There are older, and better educated, and more experienced men, in the ranks, having a stronger claim to the situation than young Mr Lawrence. These, with their friends, are not disposed to submit quietly to this injustice, and this aristocratic family influence. I am convinced, that there ivery little probability of the election of Mr Lawrence.

The assertions of the Bank papers that their friends have elected eleven members of Congress, in

SCRAPS FROM HISTORY AND LITERATURE.

Cardan was believed to be a magician. The fact is, that he was for a time a very able naturalist; and he who happened to know something of the arcana of nature was immediately suspected of magic. Even the learned themselves, who had not applied to natural philosophy, seem to have acted with the same feelings as the most ignorant; for when Albert, usually called the spanish Maine, acting as cook of the Juniper, Great, an epithet he owed to his name De Groot, constructed a curious piece of mechanism, which sent forth distinct vocal sounds, Thomas Aquinas was so much the second degree. terrified by it, that he struck it with his staff, and to the mornification of Albert, annihilated the curious labor of

The emperor Henry, A. D. 1110, offended with the Bolognese for the resistance they had made, built a citadel to bridle them. Countess Matilda animated them to demolish it. Henry, far from resenting, honoured them for their brave spirit, and gave them a charter of immunities.

No revolution, says Voltaire, was ever brought about with so little trouble and bloodshed, as that of Sweden, when Christiern received from a single unarmed magistrate, Mans, the order to quit the throne, and abdicated immediately. But he had made himself thoroughly odious to the people by his cruelty, of which one example shall be given instar omnium, viz. his ordering the mother and sister of the great and good Gustavus, in revenge for his endeavours to rescue his country, to be put in two different sacks, and thrown into the sea.

There is always a somewhat, where human nature, even in the most feeble spirits, vindicates to itself its unalienable right. The following private anecdote, told bring a handspike or an axe, for the cook had murderwe by one who knew the parties concerned, illustrates ed the captain, and followed the mate into the cabin .this :- Burgh.

In the mad times of Sacheverel, when many seemed man of sense took some pains to give a lady, a friend of the mate ran forward, the cook following him and strikhis, juster notions than she had of the limits of obedience. 'Suppose,' says he, 'Madam, that the king should seize, by a quo warranto, your husband's estate, and make him, and yourself, and children, beggars; would you think resistance unlawful?' 'I should have much cause of complaint,' says the lady; 'but,' (raising her pretty eyes to heaven) 'we must not resist the Lord's anointed.' 'But, Madam, I will put a harder case still. Suppose the king should force your ladyship into his bed, don't you think your husband might lawfully promote an association for extirpating such a brutish Tarquin ?' The lady, with downcast eyes, and a countenance covered with a rosy blush, answered: 'The case you now put, Sir, is undoubtedly harder than the former. But, as the whole sin should be the king's, and kings are answerable to God only, I do not think, my husband could lawfully do any thing toward vindicating his honor by violence.' The gentleman knowing, that the lady was, as all the votaries of passive obedience, staunch for the established church, and bitter, if a lady can be bitter against the dissenters, resolved to put to 'Give me leave, Madam,' says he, 'to ask you once more; Suppose the king should order your ladyship to go to meeting? 'What,' (says she, rising in a lovely passion, which enlivened every feature, with eyes sparkling, lips quivering, and bosom heaving) 'me to a wicked schismatical presbyterian meeting!' (These opprobrious words she had learned from the parson of the pillow-the hilt was found by the Captain's berth. parish.) 'I would kill him,' (says she, clenching her little, weak, soft hand, which made the gentleman hope he should have the pleasure of a box on the ear, of which however he was disappointed) 'if I were to die for it, sooner than he should make me enter the door of conventicle.'

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT.

[Tuesday, Oct. 29-Hon Judge Story Presiding.]

Trial of the Murderers of Capt. James Crosby, of the brig Juniper, who was killed on the 14th or August last, while on the outward bound voyage from this port to Surinam. The persons indicted for this atrocious murder was HENRY JOSEPH, a negro, from charged as principal in the first degree, and Amos OTIS, accessary before the fact, charged as principal in

With respect to the guilt of Joseph, the cook, there is not a peg to hang a doubt on, and a clearer case of cool, deliberate, unprovoked murder, perhaps does not exist in the records of blood, on land or sea; but Otis' participation in his guilt, is entirely a matter of inference strong one, doubtless, but not positive.

The first witness examined was John T. Peterson, 2d mate, the other witnesses being in the mean time removed from the court-room, in order that they might not be assisted in their recollection by each other's testimony .- Mr Peterson testified, that about 20 minutes past 2, on the morning of the 14th of August, it being his watch on deck, he saw the cook in the cabin, apparently trimming a lamp, instead of which, however, he blew it out; that immediately after, he heard a screech from the cabin, and saw the captain try to ascend the stairs of the companion-way, but turned on the steps .-Witness clenched the Captain, lifted him up, and said to him, "Capt Crosby what is the matter?" Captain replied, "I don't know." Witness then saw blood spurt out of the Captain's bosom. "I then," continued Peterson, "called immedtately on Otis to assist me, and But Otis did not take any notice of the call. The next thing I saw, was the mate coming up from the cabin, willing to go all lengths in obedience to authority, a and the cook following him with a bayonet in his hand; ing at his legs. I got hold of an oar and struck the cook a blow in the breast, but the cook got hold of the other end, and I let go-I ran forward for something else, but my foot slipped; I then saw Otis running up the forerigging. I ran to the larboard for the cook's axe, but could not find it. I then caught up half a royal-yard, the cook in the mean time stabbing at the mate, and the mate calling on me-I struck the cook two blows with the vard, and then clenched him. The cook then called on Otis for a knife, in Spanish; Otis replied that he could not find it, and had not got any. By this time the mate was exhausted, and to part them, I passed a rope round the cook's neck to choak him, but did not make out, but dragged him to the forerigging, and passed a royal clew line twice round his neck-he pushed hard against me with his fists, and that gave me a chance to

When I called on Otis for assistance, I said "Take hold for God's sake-he has killed the captain, but let us save one life;" but he did not help, and made no answer. I called all hands up, and Otis flew to the starboard side, by the empty cask, where the cook's axe was found the next morning.

After the cook was mastered the captain's condition was inquired into; he had received two stabs-one in the breast, and the other in the abdomen, from a Spanish dirk, the point of which was left in the body, and the sheath was the next morning found under the cook's

The forenoon after the captain's death, Otis was laughing and jumping about the deck, saying that the captain's death was nothing-that he had seen many men laying in their blood, and better men than the captain was. In the afternoon, Otis said-"If the cook had got through with them aft, and all hands murdered, the way in which they would walk the quarter deck would be no man's business." I asked him what he meant to do with the brig? He said he and the cook would have run her into some part of Cuba.

Latest from Liverpool .- By the ship Great Britain, Capt French, we have a Liverpool paper of Sept. 20. A notice of the Cotton market is the only article of interest .- - N. Y. Jour. Com.

Liverpool Cotton Market, Sept. 19 .- We have had a steady demand for Cotton throughout the week, and a good business is done at full prices for American descriptions and India, with 1-8 to 1-4d advance on Maranham, and 3-8d to 1-2d on Pernambuco and Baoia. The stock of long stapled cotton is now much reduced, and is likely to continue very scanty until the new crop comes forward.

Steamboat Novelty sunk .- This boat, while coming down from Albany, on Thursday night, in tow of the steamboat Oliver Ellsworth, struck a hammock on the Overslaugh amidship, and broke her back, and at high tide the water is about four feet in her cabin. The N. had a quantity of Nott's stoves on freight, but no passengers. She remained in the above situation on Saturday, when the De Witt Clinton passed, but it is probable that she will be raised soon .- N. Y. paper.
